

From: Dennis Dobbs
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/28/01 12:38pm
Subject: Settlement

The proposed settlement will have very negative consequences for Apple Computer.

If Microsoft wants to be charitable, then why don't they give a billion dollars cash to poor schools to spend on whatever they want. Why do poor schools need computers so bad? Computers are probably the least of their problems. Microsoft's proposal wont hurt them at all. They could give out a billion extra copies of Windows XP and the only thing it will cost them is the price to burn the CD's. It is in fact a good deal for Microsoft because it will give them more market share in the education market. As Steve Jobs says, this is one of the last markets that Microsoft doesn't have a monopoly in. You see, Bill Gates is being a monopolist right before your very eyes in the courtroom. Don't let this happen!

Dennis Dobbs

Student
Colorado School of Mines